WHERE YOU'LL FLY

Broken Hill

A famous far-west NSW mining town whose architecture and terrain have made it a go-to location for film and television. Sunset at the Living Desert Sculptures is a highlight.

Kati Thanda–Lake Eyre

A huge salt lake at the lowest natural point in Australia. When it fills, it becomes the country's largest lake — up to 9,500 km² — a scale that can only be understood from the air. Wet or dry, it is an extraordinary sight.

The Channel Country

A vast region of dry desert channels in far south-west Queensland that transform into spectacular flowing waterways when the rains arrive. Our stopover is Birdsville, on the edge of the Simpson Desert.

The Flinders Ranges

Towering ancient cliffs and deep craters in rugged red, pink and purple. We fly the natural amphitheatre of Ikara–Wilpena Pound before landing at Rawnsley Park Station or Arkaroola.

A note on water: the outback writes its own script. We can't promise a flooded lake in any given season — what we can promise is that the Channel Country, the salt flats, the Ranges and the pubs stand on their own. The water, when it's there, is the bonus.

WHO'S FLYING YOU

Peter and the team.

Peter has flown this route for over a decade and has trained the team who fly alongside him. They know where the pelicans gather, which dunes catch the morning light, and the publican at William Creek by name. All are fully licensed commercial pilots; the aircraft is maintained to CASA commercial standards. You won't get that from a 50-seat coach tour.
